2.0 Preliminaries.....	55
2.1 DMs from a diachronic perspective.....	57
2.2 Characteristics of DMs, criteria for DM status.....	61
2.2.1 Non-propositionality and optionality.....	61
2.2.2 Context-dependence.....	63
2.2.3 Multifunctionality.....	65
2.2.4 Weak clause association, phonological reduction, variable scope.....	67
2.2.5 Procedural meaning / non-compositionality.....	70
2.2.6 High frequency, orality, stigmatization.....	72
2.3 The outline of a network model of the functional class of DMs.....	80
2.4 Conclusions.....	82

Part II. Case studies

Introduction to Part II. .... 84

Chapter Three - Empirical research on *well

3.1 Data and methodology..... 85
3.2 Functions of well based on previous research..... 87
    3.2.1 Early accounts of well as a DM: Lakoff (1973) and Svartvik (1980).... 87
    3.2.2 Schiffrin (1985) and (1987); Schourup (1985) ..... 89
    3.2.3 The ethnomethodologist account of well..... 90
    3.2.4 Relevance Theoretic accounts of well..... 91
    3.2.5 Well in narratives..... 94
3.3 Research procedure, findings..... 95
3.4 Conclusions, a possible direction for further research..... 103

Chapter Four - Of course does, of course, mark new information - an empirical approach to *of course

4.1 Previous research, functions of of course..... 105
4.2 Of course in the Larry King corpus..... 113
4.3 Conclusions, the status of of course as a discourse marker..... 120

General conclusions, directions for further research..... 122
